The officials were commenting on a remark made by Sadat to newsmen, after meeting with West German Foreign Minister Genscher. that he planned to discuss the role in the autonomy arrangements of the Arab part of Jerusalem. The of-ficiale said: "There is no agenda for the Haifa talks, and both leaders are free to air whatever topics they desire. But as far as negotiations are concerned, Jerusalem is one and indivisible, and eo there'e really nothing to talk about.'

The officials added that Israel had made this point to U.S. President Jimmy Carter and Sadat at Camp David, and relterated its position several timee subsequently. The officials said tbey did not anticipata any formal reaction here to the statement made by Sadat.

In addition, Foreign Minister Mosbe Dayan, weli as several senior Egyptian officials are scheduled to attend the opening session of the UN General

So far, Strauss has delegated neariy ali of the day-to-day responelbilities of the autonomy negotiations to his deputy, James Leonard. Strauss did participate in one round of talks in July at Alexandria. But generally, he has not shown much interest in the slow pace of those taiks, which he perceives as largely technical and boring.

Strauss has confided to friends that he wants to get involved only on the big decisions involving broad strategy. Like Sadat, the U.S. negotiator seems to have little patience for details. But Strauss has run into opposition from Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, who both do not want to see Strauss take over the entire Middle East portfolio. Also upsetting to Strauss, according to well-placed sources, are indications that President Carter wants Strauss to take a lower public profile and to stop making so many public statements. Because Strauce allowed his personal reservations about the wisdom of the ill-fated U.S. resolution to become publicized during his last visit to the Middle East, a growing impression of disarray in the administration's Middle East policy has been created - and the president is nnhappy about that.

shall recognize it immediately." Sadat was speaking to newsmen in Alexandria at a joint press conference with visiting West German Foreign Minister Hand Dietrich Genscher who over the weekend said that his government eupports a Middle East settiement that would recognize the right of the Palestinian people to a homeland. Genscher told reporters after a 90minute session with Prime Minister Mustapha Kbalil that both governments were interested in a

He said: "This requires the right of existence of all countries in the region to be recognized and it also means the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination must be accepted by all and must be impiemented. The impiementation must include a bomeland for the Palestinian people." He did not

Six sebools in Or Yehuda will be closed by their teachers because they (the local council) failed to carry out vital repair work during the summer vacation. Among the dangers said to threaten the Or Yehuda schools were buildings in danger of collapse, sewage spilling into school grounds, alectricity terminala opan, and broken down fences around some of the schools, allowing horses and dogs to roam freely in the playgrounds.

In Beersheba, a joint meeting of all the parsnts committees of the town's 14 religious schools went on late into the night on the question of whether to strike the schools. The parents complained that the aebools were grossly overcrowded and that some children bad to learn in

IDF spokesman's statement vague on Israel involvement

Post Military Correspondent "The IDF has, does and will continue to support the Christian militias when the need arises," the army spokesman said in a statement late Friday night. He was respon-ding to charges on Israel Television's Friday weekly news magazine that he (the spokesman) had evaded questions from foreign correspondents on the presence of Israel forces in Southern Lebanon, and that his evasive answers had lost him much of his eredibility.

The spokesman's announcement again evades the question whether or not Israel artillery and armour are deployed in Southern Lebanon. For in the statement which the spokesman said was intended to clarify the charges against him, bs in fact again goes no further than admitting that Israel offers military ald, without defining the form the ald takes or saying whether or not Israeti forces are in Lebanon.

The army spokssman's office has come under beavy attack recently for its inability to supply credible information on the situation in Southern Lebanon. In response to these charges, the army last week opened up the border, allowing local and foreign newsmen to see for themselves what the situation is and to speak to the peopls of the South. The office also provided in-telligence briefings on Israel's deep strike policy against the terrorists, but these had little effect because they were not linked to events at the time of Israel's attacks in Lebanor but eame later, whan the matter was no longer an issue:

Asked if the PLO was getting Soviet arms, he said he thought those were weapons that had been in the area for some time, and added: "I frankly can't say much about that, because the weapons that we supply are destroying Lebanon."

Earlier, Waldheim said be appreciated Israel's concerns for the security of its citizens but added, "I do not believe that the policy of preemptive strikes on targets in Lebanon is acceptable or indeed is justified by the circumstances now prevailing."

All succeeding speakers spoke against the Israeli strikes except Israeti Ambassador Yehuda Blum, who said be was still waiting for an assurance that Lebanon would no longer be a staging ground for harassment of Israel.

In the Florida intervisw, Carter maintained forcefully that "there was no linkage" between increased oil production by Saudi Arabia and the Palestinian problem.

Carter reiterated the U.S. position that the U.S. will not deal with the PLO until it accepts UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. But he sounded defensive about that 1975 commitment to Israel, even though he reaffirmed it following the signing of the Israel-Egypt peace treaty.
"It was not my poticy," Carter sald, noting that former secretary of state Hanry Kissinger first enunclated it. But the president added: "I bave endorsed the poticy and I will carry it out." Carter said he had asked Arab isadars to persuade the PLO to recognize Israel's right to exist. "In most instances," the president said, "those Arab leaders said they thought they could accomplish that. They have not been able to do so."

Carter said that publicly the Arab leaders be had met 'espouse an independent Palestinian state, almost all of them, because of what they committed themselves to do at Rabat" in 1974.

But he said that the "private diplomatic tone of the conversations is much more proper than is often alieged by the press and by others." Carter sald thet supplies of Arab oil were not dependent on U.S. actions regarding the Palestinian question, "It would be a very great surprise to ms for Crown Prince Fahd to send ... a message 'if you don't expedite a resolution of the Palestinian question we would cut off your oil." He characterized U.S. relations with the Saudis as "a great stabilizing inter-relationship." "They see us as their ultimate, not quite protective, but stabilizing factor," be continued, "and they don't want to sever their relationships

"They have an abhorrence of the Soviet Union because it's atheistic and because it's communist and because they encourage cometimes radicalism and turmoli and violence, and they know that ws are a religious nation and they know we are a democratic nation, we know our attitude toward them is benevolent and they know our basic policy is one of espousing stability, and all those factors, and others that I ean name, are attractive to the Saudi Arablans.

Asked whatber there was a relationship between increased oll production and progress on Middle East negotiations, Carter repiled: 'I can tell you that there was no linkags. I can tell you that there was no linkage ever mentioned with the Saudi diplomats in Washington or with our ambassador in Saudi Arabia."

Carter said the Saudis would prefer a reduction in their oil exports. "They would rather keep the oll in the ground," he said. "They are producing the extra oil in effect as a favour to the rest of the world, to provide world stability, which helps

Asked whether the U.S. would go to war if the Arabs cut off oil supplies, the president at first noted that that question was "hypothetical" but then went on to say: "I would take whatever action is necessary to defend the security of this country, but I would have to make a judgement if an interruption of the oil suppties from some of the Middle East countries was endangering the security of my coun-

"We have analyzed all options. If you study the straight military aspects of it, which has been done by my predecessors, and which I have reviewed, it is a very difficult military question. "I would do everything I could to ble Arab oil "blackmail," the presi-dent said: "Since I have been in office there has never been any allegation made to me or any insinuation made to me by an Arab or other foreign leader that if you don't do so and so, ws will cut off your supply of

Employers Loans to be paid back before their due dates

By SHLOMO MAOZ

Post Economie Reporter The Treasury plans to allow employers in industry and agriculture to redeem the Compulsory Employment Loans taken from them by the government before their due dates of redemption, State Revenus Administration chief Urisl Linn told The Jerusalam Post last night.

The Treasury will decide this evening whether to allow smployers in transport and the building trade to redesm their Compulsory Employers Loans before their due dates as wall.

Last week the Treasury decided that after October 1 employers in industry and agriculturs will no longer have to give the government the loan - which amounts to 4.75 per cent of all the salaries they pay out after fringe benefits have been deducted.

Thia step was taken to help employers in agriculture and industry who are facing liquidity probleme because of the current credit squeeze.

Tha Treasury is willing to redeem all employers loans taken until the end of this month. But the State Revenue Administration warned that it would not allow a sudden sarly redemption of all the loans taken in recent years. If there is a rush on government coffers, the administration will be forced to regulate the rate at which the loans are redeem-

Treasury officials calculate that the eancellation of Employers Loans will mean a ILSb. loss in revenue. They hope to fill this gap by increased sala of government-linked bonds through the banks and stock In another development in the Treasury, it was learned that since Friday interest on delayed payments to the Income Tax was raised from 30 to 48 per cent. This is till below current interest rates on the free market. In the future, the Treasury plans to raise interest on delayed tax payments to the equivalent of the preferred rate taken by commercial banks from their best and most trustworthy ctients.

ing anything in return. Brandt did not insist on censuring PLO terrorism nor on any change in the PLO Covenant's commitment to destroy Israel. But these questions went unanswered. The SPD takes its general line from Chancelior Helmut Schmidt, who makes no secret of his firm dislike of the Begin government. Taking this into account, Ben-Meir cought to drive home the message that they were not only getting at the Likud by pro-Arab policies but at the whole of Israel. which included their old friends in Israel's Labour Party.

One favourite theme popped up among some of his respondents, like Minister Vogel: "Willy Brandt bas shown himself to have far-reaching vision which has yet to be disproved. Thus the 'grand coalition' be formed with the Christian Democratie Union (CDU) paved the way for the SPD'e rise to power, and his Ost-Politik helped put Germany back on the international map. Having been so right so far, can be now be wrong? After all, such a good friend of Israel would never do anything likely to cause tt harm.'

Ben-Meir pointed to a conscious effort to get out from Germany's moral commitment to Israel, with many young Germans simply un-interested. "Their apologetics have an ominous ring, taking on an ac-

They argue that Israel bas cast out morality from its politics and has let its interests take precedent, quoting our ties with South Africa, arms supplies to the Somoza regime and initial support of Idi Amin. So — they ask — why shouldn't Germany also let its interests take pride of place?" It is also well-nigh impossible for any official Israeli explanation of its settlement policy in the West Bank and the bombings of south Lebanon to find a sympathetic bearing in the Federal Republic, Ben-Meir said.

What had struck him during his visit was how Schmidt's meteoric rise on the world stage had reflected back onto the home scene. He dominated the field, and the SPD depended on him and not vice-versa. He was their only asset in blocking the CDU's drive to regain power and put Franz-Josef Strauss into the chancellorehip.

Ben-Meir's tangible achievement was the renewal of his council'e formal partnership with the North-Rhine-Westphalia DGB, providing for the exchange of delegations and similar projects. Sigeti rebbe seen as new head of Satmar hassidim

NEW YORK (JTA), - Rabbi Moshe Telteibaum, who came to Boro Park in Brooklyn 45 years ago from Siget, Rumania and is therefore known as the Sigeti Rebbe, is expected to succeed Rabbi Joel Teitelbaum as rebbe of the Satmar movement, it was learned on Friday from wellinformed sources in the Hassidic of the late Joel Teltelbaum's brother, Rabbi Yezikiel Teitelbaum.

Rabbi Joel Teitelbaum was survived by his second wife, Feige, whom be reportedly married in the 1930s in Europe after his first wife died, leaving him three daughters, all of wbom he outlived. There were no children from the second

The sources said that there was no struggle over the leadership because there is no valid contender of the stature of Rabbi Mosbe Teltelbaum, and that the leadership gap will not be filled until after the shloshim, the 30 days of mourning.

The sourcee said there may be a period of adjustment to the shock of the loss of Rabbl Joel Teitelbaum, who came to the United States and led the development of the Satmar community into a communal struc-Williamsburg and Boro Park sections of Brooklyn.

However, the sources said, the movement was too large and dynamic to remain unaffected by any lengthy period of leaderlessness. They predicted that a growing number of Satmar bassidim will begin to attend Rabbi Mosbe. Teltelbaum'e congregation in Boro Park and that, without any formal announcement or ceremony, Rabbi Moehe Teitslbaum will become rebbe of the Satmar movement, though he will continue to be known as the Sigeti rebbe.

Irish border sealed off to thwart revenge raids

DUBLIN (AP). - Troops and police in the Irish Republic scaled off the border with strife-torn Northern Ircland on Friday to prevent threstened raids by Proteetaat terrorists following the assassingtion of Earl Mouatbatten by members of the mainly Roman Catholic Irisb Republican Army,

Prime Minister Jack Lynch'e Flanna Fail (soldiers of destiny) government in Dublin ordered the massive operation after John Taylor, s leading Protestant polltlclan in the north, said 'loyalists' should aim revenge attacks against the republic.

Taylor, a British member of the European Parliamont who survived an IRA assassination attempt eight years ago, urged Protestant hardiners not to take up arms. But he declared that if the leaders of Protestant paramilitary organizations decide to act, their attacks "ehould be directed at targets within the Republic of Ireland, from which most of the serious IRA attacks now originate."

Informed sources said three battalions, sround 1,200 troops, and more than 2,000 policemen based on the touchy border will man 24-hour checkpoints on all border crossings for the next few days. A police spokesman sald all traffic into the republic from Ulster "will be closely checked" and parked vehicles in border towns inspected in case they are carrying bombs.

first renewed Protestant attack, a Catholic shop assistant was yesterBelfast. Police said that two teenagers drove up to the shop oa a motorcycls and fired at the man at point-blank range. The abandoned motorcycle was found later in a Protestant neighbourhood.

The last major lacursion by Protestants south of the border was in May 1974, when 22 persons in Dublia were killed in a rash of car bomblngs and three others in the border town of Monaghan.

The Dublin government's move reflected growing tensions in both parts of Ireland following last Moaday's assaseination of Earl Mountbatten, a cousin of Queen Elizabeth II. members of his family and 18 British soidiers on the border. All died ia bomb attacks claimed by the IRA's "Provisional" wing.

The killings — one of the worst eingle-day death tolls in the 10-yearold northero Ireland conflict - slso rekindled charges that the republic is a baven for the IRA.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher will meet Prime Minister Lynch this week, but authoritative sources in London sald no major political initiative or cross-border security crackdown was expected to come out of the meeting.

Government officials said Thatcher wants Lynch to get tough with the IRA in the Republic, which the British have long charged is a baven for the guerrillas and launching pad for raids into Northern Ireland.

On Friday, Lynch flew to Sligo hospital to visit members of Mountbatten's family who survived last Monday's bomb blast.

Argentina gov't tense before 'vanished suspects' probe awaited inspection of Argentina by the Inter-American Human Rights Commission, due to arrive here on Wednesday, has forced the touchy issue of 'disappeared' people into open and aggravated tension within the military government here. President Jorge Videla agreed last October to invite the inspectors and ie said to feel confident Argeatina will portray a regime that is working to restore law after winning a "dirty

But army Chief of Staff Carlos Suarez Mason and a few other hardline generals still oppose the twoweek inspection, diplomats say, for fear it might stir up bolder demands within Argentina for accounting the "desaparecidos" — thousands of political suspects who vaniehed and presumably were executed in the dirty war.

The split has plagued the armed forces since they overthrew Juan Peron'e widow, Isabel, in 1976. Hardiners, eager to supplant the moderates in power; have repeatedly forced Videla to delay a return to democracy oa grounds that civilians might conduct a witch-hunt for military officers held responsible for the repression.

in an attempt to reassure the hardliners, General Roberto Viola, Videia's aliy and army commander, declared in a recent Army Day speech that the military would never permit a detailed accounting of "those who are forever absent."

Viola and Videla bave admitted the military committed "excessee." in the anti-terrorist campaign, but are trying to put these episodes behind them.

The government banned a receat publication lieting 5.581 "desaparecidos" — titled "Where Are They?" - and has changed the declare them legally dead and collect employer pensions.

But moderates were embarrassed last month by 10 disappearances the first since May - and by police ralds on four civil rights groups' offices. Many political observers blams hard-liners for trying to provoke a cancellation of the inter-American inspection.

U.S. State Department spokesman

The Argentine press bas already given limited coverage to disappearance cases, including labour activists who vanished in August and six literature students who dis-

After 19 consecutive hours of surgery, attending doctors said they were outlimistic and the only concern was the possibility of infection.

The operation involved placing two steel rods on the back of the woman's spine to prevent the epinal column from twisting, followed by the implantation of a metai prosthesis, the head of the surgical team eaid. The final step involved removing a section of the peivic bone and grafting it to the front of the spinal column.

"Man-made materials don't last forever," he said, adding that the bone will eventually grow, connect the remaining vertebrae and serve as a permanent spinal replacement.

Consolidation, not innovation

By BENNY MORRIS / Jerusalem Post Reporter

THE SCHOOL YEAR that starts this morning will mark a consolidation and expansion of novel themes and practices introduced last year rather than drastic innovations.

The current school-going population - including kinder-gartens and students in Inatltutions of higher learning numbers 1,163,00, or 35,000 more than lest year. Of these 986,000 are Jews and 177,000 are Arabs and

After years of debate and vigorous propagation by Prof. Yogef Ben-Shlomo, chairman of the Pedegogical Secretariat, an experimental carly-reading project will be introduced in kindergartens in two development towns. This is the major innovation in the preschool system this year. All of Beit Shean's compulsory kindergarten pupils will be taught basic reading skills by specially trained elementary school teachers during the efternoon hours.

A "language enrichment" programme will be given to all of Beit Shemesb'e kindergarten pupils by their regular teachers during the afternoon hours, in an effort to prepare the children for the following year'e "real" reading and writing lessons.

At the end of the year the Education Ministry will evaluate the two programmes and decide which, if sny, will be introduced in kindergartens around the country. There are 230,000 children in precompulaory and compulsory kindergartens.

THE MAJOR development in the country'e primary school system igrades one through six, and, in some schools, one through cight) has been the expansion of the long school day project to cover 600 classee this year, as compared to 80 last year. The ministry's intention to activate it in 1,200 claserooms, in preparation for its universal application within five years, was stymied by Finance Ministry budget cuts.

THE MAGAZINE section of The Jerusalem Post recently carried an article on "The Times" crossword. Tucked away in the eccond paragraph was the phrase, Times' is a cymbol of England and part and parcel of its culture."

It was nice to see that "is," but one can't help feeling that wishful thinking lay behind the choice of tense. It is nine monthe since the paper suspended publication, and there are still no signs of a solution to its

it's a symmoth. Those who euffer most from the disappearance of "The Times" are the city commuters for whom the paper was as much a part of the unitorm as the bowlerhat, the rolled umbrella and the pin-striped suit. I travelled to London the morning after the sbut-down: some of the commuters struggled with the rather earmest "Guardian"; other tried to cope with the unrelieved patriotism of the "Telegrapb." But most simply stared gloomily into

Nine new junior high schools - the major creation of the school reform begun in 1969 — open their doors to-day, bringing the total number to

This year some 600 seventh-grade classes (about half the netional total) will benefit from the Buci Mitzva Jewish beritage enrichment programme, the non-compulsory alternative to Torak SheBe'al Ps (which many schools have cut from their curriculum because of a lack of interest by pupils and a shortage of people to teach it). The 80 classes which participated in the project last year will continue taking the course this year in eighth grade.

The ministry's Curriculum Divi-sion, headed by Dr. Shevah Eden, is introducing a renovated Torch ShaBe'al Pe course to "counter" the Bnei Mitzva programme, the brainchild of Dr. Danny Tropper, Hammer's religious alde charged with enbancing Jewisb con-sciousness and learning in the school

The Curriculum Division has also introduced new courses or material in music and biology for junior high schools. An experimental textbook on Israeli history, 1914-48, will he published and tried out this year in junior high schools.

IN TERMS of curriculum, the major innovation in the eccondary schools is the introduction as a compulsory subject of a 30-bour course on the Holocaust for grades 11 and 12. It will be taught as part of the Jewish

Twelve Israeli high schools will this year offer Bagrut examinations in physical fitness. One high echool. intends to offer a Bagrut exam in About 100 pupils - twice as many as last year — will take Bagrut exams in music. A further 60 pupils will he permitted to submit project papers (avodoi gemar) in music inetead of sitting for the examination.

A hasic reassessment of the Bagrut system is acheduled for this Autumn, after the public commission appointed by Hammer and chaired by Haifa University Rector Ozer Shild submite its findings on the matriculation exams later this month. The reassessment will be made in the first instance by the Pedagogical Secretariat, and the continuation or abolition of the system will then he decided upon by the minister in consultation with senior ministry officials. Hammer is known to support the continuation of the Bagrut system with a certain degree of liberalization (more eubjects of examination and more ways of being marked).

Some 50 12tb gradere from es-tablished schools in the centre of the country will spend this year in high schools in development towns as part of the Shelef programme. Now entering its fourth year, Shelef aims to bring together youngsters from Israel's long-eettled population and youth from Kiryat Shmona, Hazor, Beit She'an, Migdal Ha'emek, Kiryat Malachim, Yeruham and

THE ARAB school system is still plagued by a sbortage of classrooms. Various schools, in Bak'a El-Gharbieb, in Kfar Yaesif and clsewhere are expected to remain shut today in protest against what the local authorities regard as government indifference to their plight."
But the director-general of the Education Minietry, Eliszer Shmueli, maintained last Wednee-day that Arab education is practicaly the only area of the ministry's activities not subjected to budget cuts this year.

A new high school opens today near Ramle for Arab children from the Ramie and Lod area. Until now high-school-age Arab children in the area etudied in eeparate classes located in elementary ecboois. The new four-year school will offer both academic and vocational eecondary education streams.

A fifth elementary school for Arab children opens this year in Haifa and two new elementary schools are to open in Umm-El-Fahm. Altogether there are 152,342 pupils in the Arab (Moslem and Christian) Arab school

In the Druse education system, the major innovation this year is the introduction of a new textbook on Druse history for high echool history

WHAT IS IT that the British are missing, these beleaguered people who find themselves, like Proust, a la recherche du temps perdu?

. Well, they miss the writers, of course, Like Bernard Levin, securge of lawyers, the post office and the National Front. He of the dry wit and the interminably long sentences (one article he wrote, in reply to the accusation that be was prejudiced 1,000-word-long centence). Or cricket correspondent Alan Gibson, who once, when rain stopped play for a whole day at a county match. wrote a lengthy article about the discomfort he was enduring because be had forgotten to bring his pyjamas with him. It might have come from a war correspondent at the front. This air of frivolity, which was one of the most endearing qualities of "The Times," was perhaps most noticeable in the letters page, itself a national institution. Although most of the correspondence came from men in the news and concerned matters of national importance, the bottom right-band corner wae always reserved for subjects of less

There were letters about the sighting of the first cuckoo of the year, about the names of obscure villages (which brought the village, of Piddletrenthide, nesting on the banks of a river called the Piddle, into the glare of public attention) and letters suggesting solutions to the crises of the day. When it was suggested that motorists in Britain the road, one correspondent wrote that, as this was bound to be confusing to some drivers, there should be a six-month transitional phase when people could drive on either side of the road. Then, during one of the Apollo moon voyages, there was a very worried letter from a woman who eaid ehe had looked at ber diary for the date of the proposed landing and thought that someone ought to inform NASA that there was not going to be a moon at all that night,

EVERY YEAR there was a letter from a man who had compiled a list of the most popular names for bables born during the preceeding year. It was based on the names given in the ."Births" section of the paper's pereenal columns. Top people who (in the words of its slogan) took "The Times," did so partly to discover from these columns which of their friends had got engaged, married, bad a child or died. Hence, the cartoon in another paper which showed two old men in bowler hats standing in front of a billboard that read: "Times ebutdown enters fourtb month." One of them is saying, "Have you noticed that no one bas died for agee." On St. Valentine's Day, the feast of the patron saint of lovers, the personai columns were swollen by expressions of ardour, Some were just plain eilly: "Heffalump for breakfast, beffalump for tea, ob bow I love my beffalump, does my hef-falump love me?" Others were at least single-minded. One man wrote "Jane, Jane, Jane, Janc, Jane, Jane, Jane." The next year, with admirable originality, be wrote: "Jane, Jane, Jane, Jane, Jane, Jane, Jane, Jane."

The following day other papers would carry lists of the most popular terms of endearment used in the column: Pooh 20, Bear 19, Bunny 15,

I have used the past-tenee throughout this article. I hope that my pessimism is unfounded and that before the first cuckoo of 1980 givee voice, thousands of executive working days will have been lost, as directors and managers rack their hrains trying to solvs "Times" crossword clues like: "Complaint you may get from an Irish tart." The answer, of courss, ie not hormones (whore moans) - "The Times" is a respectable paper — but an anagram of the last two words in the clue -arthritis.

DÂLIAT-AL-CARMEL. - Dr. Rivka Bar-Yosef, recently appointed Special Adviser on Women's Affairs to the Deputy Prime Minister's Of-fice, visited bere recently to hear Druse women talk about their problems and ambitions.

To ber surprise, Dr. Bar-Yosef found that gone were the days when Druse women did little but tend children, watch the stove and eerve

Of the 45 young women who met ber at the house of Rada Kamal, the local WIZO secretary, all but fourwork outside and about balf bad completed high school. Dr. Bar-Yosef, who teaches at the Hebrew University, had been invited to meet with the Druse women by the local WIZO brancb. 'Our busbands bave arrived at the conclusion that a woman who studies and works is no less a woman than one who doesn't," one of them said.

"Many of them today not only do not oppose the idea, but also encourage to go ahead. Unfortunately, not aiways do we have the necessary means to do so."

The main obstacle, Dr. Bar-Yosef learned, is not a husband'e objection, but the lack of day-care centres in the village. Druse families are usually large; five, six or more children are not rare. Yet even in Dailat-ai-Carmel, the country's biggest Druse viilage, there is only one pre-kindergarten for toddiers under three. "We need a place and people to look after the children while we work. Why not a crecbe hy the plants, and operated by people hired by the plant, as in many other places? It would help a lot," they

Job opportunities bave been plenty, they claimed, since a number of large Haifa firms bave opened branches here. More than 500 of the village girls work at the Gibor, Elscint and Orna plants and more would follow, if places were provided.

Learning the facts on household management and human relations. But this isn't enough. "We wish there were more courses for girls," they told Dr. Bar-Yosef "to provide us a wider choice of jobs." Although elementary echool in Daliat-ai-Carmel bas for yeare been co-educational, higher education is still separate, and most teachers at the ORT ecbool are men teaching boys, With more women teachers, other girls' classes could be set up.

Curiously enough, Dr. Bar-Yosef, and the Druse women talked for more than an hour about progress and changing mores within the Druse community, but all the Druse were dreesed traditionally, with long, heavy long-sleeved dresses or long-sleeved cotton blouses. All bad long hair in plaits, falling over their eboulders, and none bad a vestige of makeup. Shoes were the only sign of modernity: most wore high-beeled sandals.

"There is very little I can promise, and very little I can actually ac-complish," Dr. Bar-Yosef told ber audience at the end of the mesting. "The Public Committee on Women's Affairs, which I am setting up now, will be an advisory board, not an executive body. Still it is vital that we learn the facts so that the right word can be dropped in the right ear, and when called to help, we can present a plan as close to reality as possible."

Clothes or cups, fabrics or furniture, it's all designed by the same man, writes Deborah Lewin, in an exclusive interview.

IN PARIS they told me that it was rumoured that before long Pierre Cardin would take over the Elysee Palace, now the residence of the President of France. The famous designer lives in a sumptuously furnished building overlooking the Palace's east side, while to the west stand the imposing bulldings housing the brains and businees heart of the Cardin emplre. To the north is Cardin's latest venture a joint project with the famous restaurant. Maxim's, to market food products, crockery, cutlery and linens bearing the coat of arms of the most famous restaurant in the world. If the President thinks his southern flank is safe, then he's wrong, for Cardln's siege is nigh complete. Behind the Elysée is the Theatre Espace Cardin, a place for avant-garde performancee - masked dancers from India. drummers from Japan, dancers from Broadway or such stars as Marlene Dietrich.

Shirley Bassey and Renata Tebaldi. Pierre Cardin looked much more comfortable than I did, perched on the edge of one of his pleces of way-out, startling furniture, which he deeigns in between planning collections of clothes for men, women, children and infants, acting the Impresario at his theatre and launchlog another Maxim's ehop. He told me that he finds furniture the most exciting of his design projects. His futuristic shapes are characteristic of the man who helped Dior launch the New Look. He has a revolutionary perception of everyday objects, everything that we wear or decorate our bomes with, and now what we put on our tables. Cardin saye he never has any problems conjuring up new ideas, whether in designing packaging for food, cigarettes, fabrics or even the Interior of a jet airliner.

Cardln was the first trendsetter to jump on the Chinese rickshaw, after Peking opened up to the West. In November, 1978, he wangled himself an official invitation on "a cultural mission," and the result will soon be trade relations between the Forbidden City and the House of Cardin. The designer considers with excitement the mind-boggling prospects of the vast Chinese market, and the Idea of bundreds of millions of Chinese women wearing his creations. Their Japanese sisters and brothers are already among his best clientele today.

There is a league of Interpreters of the enigmatic Cardin, who remains austere ln dress and manner while at the heart of the glamour industry. They speak of the effect on the maestro of his three Chinese visits. as reflected in the pagoda-like shoulders of his latest clothes collection, and in bis penchant for hlue and green lacquer in hie most recent furniture collection.

Cardin is one of the great post-war success stories. In 1978, he became the landlord of the building where he made his debut 33 years earlier. The son of a poor immigrant Italian, Cardin is at 56 the neighbour of the President of France and a Rothschild. He is a fanatically private person, keeping his personal life out of the public eye. The world knows about Pierre Cardin only what this most famous of taste-makers, allows to be known. He was a sickly child and at 14 started as apprentice in the clothing trade at St. Etienne, while he also fell in love with the theatre. A fortune-teller he met in a café predicted his future success, which prompted him to try his luck in Paris, where in 1945 he was hired by Paquin, one of the largest fashlon houses. His gift of sewing came in handy, for the young Cardin helped do the costumes for Jean Cocteau's film "Beauty and the Beast."

Through that job, he met such great names as Cocteau, Jean Marais and Christian Bérard. After a spell with Schiaparelli, he ewitched to Lelong, where he met Christian Dior, whom he followed to Dior's own fashion house in 1946. Four years later, Cardin started on his own in the Rue Richepanse with five eeamstresses. A year later, working 18 hours a day, Cardin was employing 60 women and had moved to the second floor of the fashionable Rue du Faubourg St. Honoré. Flve years later, he occupled the entire building.

In 1959, Cardin gambled and won: he was the first to present high fashion for men, at a time when euch an idea was regarded as effeminate. That same year, he shocked the high fashion world by opening a boutique of his products in the Printemps department store. In 1966, Cardin sbook this country when presenting his "coemonaut" style in a fashion show at the Israel Museum. Our staid establishment was chaken to the core by the eight of eix mannequins and four male modele jumping in between the art exhibits. This was his first contact with Israel. Later he awarded a licence to Bagir to produce his menswear. Cardin told me that be cancelled the conceesion because the Israeli side did not suit his conditions. Back home, I was told that political considerations were involved in the cancellation. However, Diva Ltd., Israeli manufacturers of beach and swimwear, produce Cardin swimwear bere, for export. All the models are designed by Cardin and sent back to him for personal inspection.

The designer told me his formula for success is hard work. He has little time and patience for nightclubbing and other follies associated with the fashion world. "I was born lucky," he said, adding: "There are many with talent, but to reach the top you have to work hard even if you are lucky. I live for my work. If I have made it, it is because I work very bard.

"Once I wanted to be an actor, but I was very young at the time. (He played alongside Jeanne Moreau in a film, and they have einco remained very close friends.) I have no wish to find myself playing a clothes-horse or a betrayed busband." Cardin said.

Is he a lonely person? "I live with my sister next door to Baron de Rothschild. I require solitude in order to create. Artists are made like that. But I am not lonely." He went on to tell me: "What I wear myself depends on what appointments I have that day. I like navy because it's smart. At home I wear a lot of jerscy because it's comfortable, cashmere, aweaters and towelling robes. I like wearing dinner jackets too.

His declaration contrasts with his clothes -he was wearing an old navy hime biazer and flannel trousers. "Those are the ciothes I wear when I move furniture around my house or office. I don't like an unchanging environment.

His clients include the President of France. and Madame Giscard d'Estaing, the wivee of foreign envoys and senior Cabinet ministers. singer Johnny Halliday, ex-Beatle Ringo Starr. Rudolph Nureyev, and a big chunk of the jet eet.

Pierre Cardin's clothes, accessories, luxury gifts, furniture and furnishings sell on five continents through 350 franchises paying him rich royalties. Tens of thousands of workers in many lands make the 160 products bearing bis name, carrying them into the far corners of the earth including Russia and China. Was he well past being a millionaire? Cardin was evasive, but did not eay "No."

Fascination of Fashion

Razzle dazzle and hard bargaining - Fashion Week was a bit of both. Green Fay Cashman made the rounds of the showrooms.

Straight and narrow for a life that a far from that - Nirkam'a disco mood (left) and sidesplitting from Kitan (centre) and Lahav (right). Note all those squared-off shoulders and clinched-in waists.

NO SINGLE non-political, nonmilitary event in Israel derives as much media attention and coverage as Fashion Week. Television crews prowl the corridors between the showrooms; photographers trail siter VIPs for whom special shows are staged; and journalists flit from showroom to showroom to press rooms in the quest for interesting titbits of information with which to regale their readers.

More than half the journalists are strictly speaking not fashion writers, nor are the photographers fashion specialists — hut they are all at-tracted by the fascination of fashion. Their main interest is in securing a ticket to the opening show, which for the most recent Israel Fashion Week Jerusalem was directed Israel TV director Yossi Tzemach of Eurovicion fame. Fashion-Week organizers watching the rebearsals were pessimistic about the outcome. Tzemach's was a nerve-wracking exercise for models and pre-viewers. Tzemach remained calm throughout - never raising his voice, and always polite when asking for any sequence to be rehearsed "just one more time." His perseverence paid off. The show was a hit, proved by entbusiastic nce applause at frequent inter-

There were some people who objeried to the slow-down of pace. Accustomed to the razzle-dazzle of disco-style fashion shows, they con-sidered that Tzemach, who had introduced a 'fifties rhythm, had regressed.

Yael Matalon, former Director of the Fashion and Textile Centre at the Israel Export Institute and currently Director of the IEI'a Consumer Goods Division, later took a census of opinions from buyers, manufacturers and press representatives.
"Peuple either loved it or hated it." she said. "There was no middle

"I thought it was super," said Ann Bnyd of the London Sunday newspaper "The Observer." "We go tn so many fashion shows, and we want to see the clothes, not the Folies Bergere. It was a great idea to make it slower so that we could really see the garments."

The two fashion houses which are invariably the key focus of Fashion Week are Gottex and Beged Or. All VIP tours for government and municipal lesders start with one or other in the eumptuous Hilton hotel suites which they have converted into temporary showrooms. Some of the smaller manufacturers complain at heing by-passed in these tours. They feel some sense of discrimination, and cialm that they could do with some more minieterial en-

They shouldn't feel too badly, hecause Bagir, Israei's largest fashion exporter, is also overlooked. Bagir deliberately maintains a low profile, sven though its exports exceed the combined overseas sales of both Gottex and Beged Or. Bagir's exports during 1979 have increased by 59 per cent and the estimated total by the end of the year is $23m. Fashion Week sales were so successful that Bagir has ordered ahead for almost its entire production for 1980. The firm is part of the giant Polgat conglomerate.

At least one VIP visitor did ber showroom touring without any pomp or ceremony. Racbel Dayan, wife of the Foreign Minister, was one of the earliest arrivals. Very few people recognized the elegant blonde standing in the Hilton lobby walting for the elevator. She was on ber way to Ero, where she huys most of her Actually, it's a minor miracle that Fashion Week came off the ground this season. Imported fabrics were beld up in the customs sheds. The government crackdown on tax evasion includes a thorough check of raw material imports to see whether the price on the invoice corresponds with the quality of the goods, and as far as the fashion industry is con-cerned, whether anything has been smuggled underneath the outer layers of fahric. The owners of Gingette were near tears when they discovered that an expensive bolt of allk had heen slashed right through one and. This meant that they had to change all their cutting techniques to conform with the reduced width. They were offered no compensation for the damage. Riki Ben Ari, who sold nut her entire collection to KVD in Germany, had exactly one wesk in which to get it ready. Initially, she was unable to free har fabrics from the customs, in addition to which a government loan arrived three months late. The loan, when it finally arrived, covered the cost of customs duties and storage. "The government gave with one hand and took with the other," her son Ofer commented wryly.

An easing in South Africa's import restrictions may give Israeli fashion a wider exposure on the South African market. An important group of South African buyers representing a chain of some 450 department stores, expressed keen interest in Sportlife and Lady Bagir. Quotas notwithstanding, South African buyers bave in the past placed com-paratively small orders in Israel because our styling was too way out for South African tastes. The South Africans prefer a tailored, unciuttered look which expiains why they have been doing business with firms such as Aled, Dorina and Gideon Oberson. This also indicates why Lady Bagir is a natural for the South African market, and why the simply styled Sportlife collection is also under consideration.

Incidentally, Shuki Levy, Sportlife's resident designer, this season turned his band to knitwear design. He was responsible for a large segment of the Nirkam collec tion, the rest of which was designed hy Shlomit Fenishel and Oded Gera. Oded and his wife Ella who are earning a reputation as fashion coordinators and fashion show organizers, are taking the collection to shows in Dusseldorf, London and Rachel of Biba, who returned to Fashion Week after a long absence, had tremendous success with her appliqued tricot T-shirts; and Terra, who do a special line for Ted Lapidus in Paris, soid bayond their wildest expectations.

Fashion, like so many other things in Israel, is tinged with hutzpa. A best example of this is Mausner. Previously specialising in outsize fit-tings for the local market, Mnusner this year decided to try for export. The problem was that they didn't have an experienced designer. Former Ei Al air bostess Miri Porat, who had done a course in interior design, and had hriefly studied pattern cutting under Raschel Afori, was employed to design a young. with-it collection — three weeks before fashion week. Buyers from Germany. France and Switzerland, including C & A representatives, did not detect Miri'e lack of experience, nor did iocal buyers who told Shuki Mausner that they were thrilled about his new range.

Maytime, a new firm, made up of experts who had formerly worked for some seven or eight well established fashion houses, did not do as well as they had anticipated. Although their styling, fabrics and colours were up-to-date, foreign huvere did not heat a path to their door. Admittedly, they were stuck in a corner at the end of a corridor, but so were a dozen or more other manufacturers whose sales ranged from good to excellent. But what Maytime loet on the swings, they made on the roundabouts. Local huyers, already familiar with the firm, placed large orders, which means there is a good chance that Israeii women will he wearing Maytime in summer 1980. Some years hack, when Rikma's Rojy Ben Joseph introduced her dramatic ethnic collections, she established a fashion image which Israel has not been able to eradicate. Every season, there are huyers and foreign fashion writers who come here specifically in eearch of ethnic creations. While Roly still has a suggestion of ethnic, and Ero this season introduced an ethnic print, by and large ethnic is out - except at Maskit which on this occasion did not participate in Fashion Week, To make up for the absence, visiting journalists from ahroad were hosted at a luncheon in Maskit's pic-turesque Jerusalem premises and given a grand tour of the Judaica exhibition, the band-woven carpet display, the silver and gold jewelry departments - and of course the fashion - both ethnic and otherwise. They raved over the embroidery and silk screen prints, and were enraptured hy a soft wool coat designed hy

Finy Leiterdorf, doyen of Israel's fashion designers. Two of the journalists would have bought the coat there and then, but for the price tag: IL5,500 was prohibitlye even in foreign currency. The Israell woman who last winter paid between IL1,500 and IL2,500 for a winter coat, is one for a chock when the cold season sets in. German journalists purchased several gift iteme to take home with them, and Simon Verlaat representing the Dutch fashion magazine, "Blegance," fell in love with a Yemenite selver filtgree bracelet which he wanted to buy for his wife. Unfortunately, he didn't have enough money with him. Luckily, a sentimental fallow Dutch journalist Roelie Meyer of the Netherlands

Press Association was on the spot to lend him the sum to make Mrs. Veriaat happy.

Sentiment is apparently a Dutch character trait. When Simon heard that Aiaska's Export Manager Yochi Eshkar was celebrating her hirthday, he ordered three birthday cakes to accommodate all the candles. Yochi, who used to work for the Israel Export Instituts, always attends the traditional farewell party in the press room. She herself, had forgottsn the date, and was genuinsly surprised when the three cakes were wheeled into the room.

The Jerusalem Hilton's Food and

Beverags Manager Stefan Simkovics gets a real kick out of catering for Fashion Week events. The poolsids party which he organized on the second night for huyers and manufacturers, was attended hy more than 400 people, who couldn't he blamed if they cast all thoughts of beit-tightening to the winds. The array of meats, salads, desserts and drinks was pure paradise for giuttons, but Simkovics who is also somewhat of a showman was not content to leave it at that. Flame-lit houquets of flowers and festoons of halloons floated in the pool. Twin projectors simultaneously screened two sub-titled filme all night. Go-go dancers performed non-stop to a disco heat, and when the guests wanted to take over the portable dance floor, the go-go girls moved their performance to the roof overlooking the plaza adjacent to the pool. Charcoal steaks were still being broiled and served well after midnight. The most well-oiled operation runs the risk of snags due to the human element. The Judea Lounge at the Jerusalem Hilton is the ecene of a cocktail hour fashion show once a week. As luck would have it, coordinator Beverty Crawford became iji during Fashion Week of all times. The Hilton's P.R. Director Frank Nothman approached some of the manufacturers to heip him in his plight, but almost everyone was too busy to organize a show at such short notice. Beged Or'e Guy Fulop came to the rsscue, transporting his whole collection from the 20th to the ground floor of the hotel.

Judging the success of Fashion
Week is difficult. One hecomes aware of the extent of buyers' interest when one rides the elevator first thing in the morning in the company of a bevy of models who are ali apologising to each other for not ex-changing showroom visits hecause they are eo busy working. The final sales figures are 50 per cent higher than those of last summer (which was outstandingly successful), taking inflation into account.

What is gratifying, is the opinion of Suzanne Turower. London-based editor of the prestigious fashion publication 'IM International.' Turower, who formerly edited 'Fashion Weekly." and who bas covered many Israel Fashion Weeks, says that Israei is now on a par with the best in the world. "There's heen a tremendous improvement in a short space of time."

Diana Lerner talks to the man who put Bogey into men's toiletries.

Bogart had been producing a line of high priced men'a clothing. Then, one day, he decided he would try something more creative, he relates. Fragrancs requires creating an image and doing something unique, unlike couture where to be in fashion you have to follow a trend of what

His success is also a matter of men'e liberation, be believes. Men are becoming as conscious as women about body fragrance and the care of their skins. High time, too, he adds.

While his business requires him to keep trotting the glohe, the strongly committed Jewish businessman cherishes the time he spends in Israel. In 1962, Bogart, a paratrooper, spent 214 years doing his military service at a Nahal settlement, Kihhutz Beit Shlta. There he met Regins, a fellow Mahal volunteer from France, who later became his wife.

By ROBERT ROSENBERG Jerusalem Post Reporter

The son of the donor of the sports stadium at the Hebrew University said in an interview Friday that his "family is not religious and there had been no conditions attached to the donation banning the stadium's use on Saturdays."

Erwin Grossberg, the son of the late Richard Grossberg, who donated the money for the stadium, said in an interview with the Jerusalem newspaper Kol Ha ir that he relies on the university authorities "in all that is connected to operating the stadium - and if they have any questions about my position, they know how to contact

Press reports have consistently insintained that the Grossberg will donating the stadium specified that there be no sports activities condricted there on Saturdays.

Honig said that the university is closed on Saturdays and that it is "not a place for 20,000 to 80,000 spectators on Sabbaths." He also said that the university supports partici-pant sports, including regularly scheduled school sports, "It's true the stands are rarely used, he said, neting that they are only used for annual independence day activities, for exampla."

Koi Ha'ir is a new local Hebrew publication in Jerusalem distributed free on Fridays.

During a recent visit to Jerusalem, Grossberg met with university officials and a witness to one of the meetings, tour guide Reuven Hecht, said that the officials first said that they were opposed to using the facility on Saturdays because of the lack of parking facilities, then said they didn't want to disturb neighbouring Neve Sheanan residents, but then "the spokesman admitted that the decision was in the hands of the

Coe watches Ovett make 3rd fastest mile ever

LONDON (AP). - Steve Ovett of Britain just missed setting a world recerd for the mile Friday night with a time of 3:49.6 - the third-fastest run of all time.

Sehastian Coe, who set the world mark of 3:49.0 at Oslo six weeks ago. watched from the stands at London's Crystal Palace as his great British rival threatened to lewer the mark. Ovett was inside Coe's Oslo time on each of the three laps. But on the mile record was going. It was a tremendously gutsy run by Ovett."

Wessinghage bad a slight lead over Ovett at the hell, but the Englishman passed him with 300 metres to go and finished five metres

Besides Coc, only John Walker of New Zealand has run a faster mile. Walker ran 3:49.4 in 1975.

Ovett's run was easily the fastest ever on a British track. The old British All-Comers' record was 3:53.4, set by Kip Keino of Kenya in

The first 10 runners in Friday's race all finished under feur minutes. The competition spurred Ovett to run 3.23 seconds faster than his own previous best. Coe, who set world records for the mile, 800 and 1,500 metres, had done a lap of honour before a standing, cheering crowd at the packed stadium.

He told nawsmen be probably would not race against Ovett until the Olympic Games in Moscow next summer. Then he took his seat in the stands and watched Ovett come near to breaking his record.

Too many voices

THERE CAN BE little doubt that in the past few months Israel bas been subject to a well-orchestrated campaign to undermine ber image and standing in U.S. public opinion.

This campaign in which the Carter administration is continuing with a vengeance what Henry Kissinger bagan in his "agonizing reappraisal" of U.S. policy to Israel in 1975, is intended to legitimize American pressure to force. Israel to go much further than it agreed to go in the Camp David agresments.

When such pressures mount, as they have during these months, there is a natural tendency to point an accusing finger at the government's failures in hasbara - a nearly untranslatable term that describes the image building and informational activities spanning the gamut between outright propaganda and putting the best face on policies and actions. Hasbara bas been a favourite whipping boy in Israel ever since the euphoria of the post Six-Day War period ended, and especially since the Yom Kippur War. Some critics have gone so far as to imply that effective hasbara can succeed in selling any policy. This is clearly a grotesque exaggeration.

Hasbara should be a handmaiden of policy. Given Israel's dependence on the U.S. government and the great sensitivity of that government to the opinions of its people, It la, however, an essentiai bandmaiden.

Some of the policles the government is pursuing are simply unexplainable to American — or world — public opinion. Yet barring these it is also possible to point to two major failures of Israel's hasbara efforts: too many officials and institutions, that have a direct impact on Israel's image abroad, work at cross purposes or ignore the implications of their statements and; there is a minimal, and at times non-existent, input of policy-impact assessment into the policymaking process.

Without wishing to claim that a vast improvement in hasbara could by itself drastically alter Israel'a fortunes in a difficult world situation, it is still possible to point to a number of changes that could increase Israel's chances of weathering the difficult years that lie ahead. The most urgent need is to put an end to the plethora of voices that ostensihly and confusingly apeak for Israel. At the outset of the Begin government two years ago, the Prime Minister's confidant, Shmuel Katz, argued for the creation of a separate Information Ministry. He lost the battle against Foreign Minister Moahe Dayan. But the experience of the past two years seems to

Dayan, who cares little for the image-making functions of diplomacy, and admits it, seems now to have come around to understanding the need for baving one voice speak for Israel abroad, even if that voice is not located in the Foreign Ministry.

Dayan's hesitant conversion should be seized as a singular opportunity. In the past, attempts to set up a separate ministry of information foundered on the feudal bureaucratic interests of the concerned ministries, and especially the Foreign Ministry. Dayan's comments to his Foreign Ministry staffers last week should perhaps be taken as a signal to reopen the fight for a unification of foreign hasbara agencies within the Prime Minister's Office.

Unconfirmed reports speak of talks being held between that office and the Foreign Ministry for greater coordination of hasbara efforts. But "coordination" is often the last refuge of the beleaguered politician or bureaucrat who refuses to choose between competing bureaucratic agencies.

It is not coordination that is needed but unification, and silencing of insensible voices. The prime candidate for such silencing should be the Army spokesman's office which has been singularly obtuse regarding Israei's hasbara needs.

What is equally important is that the unifying voice be located at a level in the political system sufficiently high for it to bave an impact on the policymaking process.

This means the appointment of a Minister of Information working out of the Prime Minister's Office who has the Prime Minister's confidence to a degree that would enable him to influence Mr. Begin before decisions are taken and whose voice would carry weight when it is clear that policies must be altered before they result in further havoc.

This may admittedly be theoretical. For the problem remains bow to persuade Dayan, Weizman, Sharon and Burg to mention only a few of the discordant voices, to subordinate and discipline their public pronouncements to the strictures of the Prime Minister and his chief for hasbara.

ON A NIGHT in October 1837, a rope was let down from the top of the wall of the Temple Mount. A figure in Beduio attlre climbed down and hurried to a car walting on the road below and was driven away at speed. There were no British soldiers in the area. They were all guarding the entrances to the Haram el-Sharif. With the end of the Arab general strike on October 3, the tension had relaxed and the authorities assumed that the man who had taken rafuge in the Haram el-Sharif would sooner or later fall into their hands.

They were mistaken. The man was driven to Jaffa where he boarded the boat of a friend and sailed to

The fugitive was Haj Amin el-Husseini, the first and last leader of the Palestinian Arabs.

Besides bearing the chief respon-sibility for the 1936 riots, and thwarting any prospect of a peaceful settlement of the Arah-Jewish dispute, he will be remembered forever as an active supporter of the Nazis. In the bistory of the Palestinians he will also be remembered for heing the person responsible for destroy ing the independent political activity of his people for generations hy turning the Palestinian question into an all-Arab problem.

The reason for the absence of any independent local Palestinian Arab leadership capable of making a decision even on behalf of the Palestinians who actually live in the "territories" that are destined for autonomy is to be found 40 years ago.

THE TERRORIST campaign of 1936:37 left its effects in yet another way. Any contact with the Jews or the British was regarded as treason. And any political leader who was suspected of such contact was almost alwaye sure to lose his life.

Those unfortunate enough to be found guilty were not immediately killed: they were usually kidnapped, taken to the hills, and thrown into caves and pits with snakes and scorpions. If anybody succeeded in getting out of such a place alive he was "court-martialled" and usually executed. The best he could hope for was a merciless flogging. People were so terrified that even the victim's relatives were afraid to hury the their dead. Corpses with a shoe stuffed in the mouth as a sign of degradation would he left lying in the streets of villagee or towns, sometimes for days.

The memory of these murders persists to this day. In case anybody succeeded in forgetting the PLO sent its bloody reminders. People who showed a readiness to enter into come kind of political dialogue with Israel were either kliled or threatened with death. The latest was Haj Hashim al-Khazindar, the lmam of Gaza, who supported the peace trea-

MOSHE SHARON examines the reasons for the lack of an independent Palestinian leadership.

Searching for the non-existent

THE DEVELOPMENT of pan-Arab ideology among the Palestinian Arabs since the '30s, which in practical terms has meant turning in the direction of the Arab countries, has had two results. On the one hand, the Internal divisions within the Palestinian Arah camp have increased with the growth of local patriotism and tribal and family lovalties; on the other band, the local Palestinian political organizations and parties that once could talk in collective Palestinian terms have disappeared. In 1948, the complete dependence on the Arab countries proved disastrous. For as a result of the total inability to act according to their own interests, the Palestinians falled to establish a state, and their reliance on the Arab countries increased even more. With the outbreak of the 1948 war, most of the actual and potential Palestinian leadership left the country. At ths same time, a few Arah countries hecame hosts to thousands of Palestinian refugees who have since been used as a political and propaganda tool for furthering the political and military aims of those Arab countries themselves.

THE PLO bas no existence in the Middle East scene as an independent political power. It is very well aware of this fact, and that is why it is so determined to consolidate its bold on its positions in Lebanon, where it is r the least direct control of its Arah hrothers. In Syria and Iraq, in Egypt, and in other Arab countries. the PLO is dependent on the goodwill and money of its hosts, and its various sub-organizations acrve their political and military objectives in many ways.

With the West Bank under Jordanian rule and the Gaza Strip under Egyptian rule from 1948 until 1967, the objective conditions for the growth of a local Palestinian-Arab eadership capable of organizing for any all-Palestinian political activity were, in fact, non-existent. The Jordanians and the Egyptians would nip any hint of such activity in the bud, hecause it signified a challenge to their rule.

Moreover, as time passed the Arah-Israeli conflict hecame increasingly sophisticated, both politically and militarily. The struggle against the Jews was no longer a question of sporadic forays hy armed hands: it involved armies and up-to-date weapons. The more prolessional the war became, the less were the Palestinians in a position to act independently even if they could; consequently their dependence on the Arab countries increased still more.

THE SIX DAY WAR of 1967 and the Israell occupation of the West Bank and Gaza emphasized the Arab insblilty to colvs the Pslestinian problem militarily. The October War of 1973, with all the damage it caused to Israel's image, further accentuated this inability.

After the Six Day War, there came. moments of introspection. Israel immediately began to speak in terms of trading "territories for peace," and the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza wanted to know who was going to he their next landlord. With Israel constantly stressing that its stay in the occupied area was only temporary, they were unwilling to take any political action that might he held against them after the return of Jordanian and Egyptian rule, and so they maintained their old loyalties to Jordan and Egypt.

King Hussein opened his purse and money kapt on streaming into Jerusalem, the West Bank, and even Gaza. Individuals and organizations knew on which side their bread was buttered. Until 1970, no local leader wished, let alone dared, to speak in other than Jordanian or Egyptian terms. When, in September 1970, the king struck at the Palestinians in his country, it seemed for a while that his connections with the West Bank had been severed for ever. With Jordan out of the game for the time heing, the political weight of the PLO grew. It reached its peak after the

THE HEARTS of the Palestinians were filled with real national pride by the exploits of the PLO - its dead became martyrs. Its achievements on the international scane gave them the feeling that, for the first time in modern history, something genuinely Palestinian had acquired respectability among the nations of the

The rapture that seized the Palestinians when Yasser Arafat appeared in the UN Assembly is thus fully understandable. Even among the Israell Arahs, the seuse of national soildarity was strengthened; they began to find themselves, and wished to prove their eteadfastness in the face of foreign rule. The "Land Day" of 1976 was the obvious manifestation of these new feelings.

Nobody really cares whether the PLO is completely independent, or whether it relies entirely on Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Syrla or Irac. Everyone knows that It is divided into many rival factions, that there is an under-current of Moslem-Christian tension in it, that its main military wing - the Saika - is a tool manipulated by the Syrians. All these and many other facts bavs long been known, yet the organization is Palestinian. Its actions contain an element of Shatara - bravado - for it has committed outrageous acts in many countries and has more than once compelled great powers to accept its terms. It harasses Jews constantly, bringing death into their homes.

In the eyes of the Palestinians, the actions of the PLO combine two extremely important psychological elements: the redemption of trampled pride and blood revenge. And the PLO appears to be very dangerous to any Palestinian who may think of disobeying it.

IN A SOCIETY in which Westernstyle elections are an impossibility, the appearance of the PLO as the potential landlord should not he surprising. It does not have to be alected to represent the Palestinians, yet can one Palestinian stand up openly and challenge its authority? Nohody would dare to do so today, any more

Some advisers thought then that if Israel took the initiative, it could create a naw leadership for the Palestinian Arabs in tha West Bank and Gaza. A more moderate leadership, maybe of the Nasbashibi type, with whom Israel would be able to come to some understanding. It was a total misinterpretation of the situation that led to the decision to bold municipal elections in the West Bank and Gaza in 1976...

The Palestinians were unanimous in regarding the PLO as their representative. Those in Israel responsible for policy in the territories had the unrealistic idea that Israel would be able to reach a political understanding with the local Palestinians over the heads of the Arab countries and the PLO. They overlooked the fact that for almost two generations, the Palestinians had not held their destiny in their own hands. They failed to see that the Palestinian problem had become an Arah problem by the choice of the Pelestinians themselves.

From time to time one can bear Arab intellectuale arguing that Israel has prevented the emergence of a local Palestinian leadership. Such an argument is only an excuse: a leadarship does not need cottonwool cushioning in order to develop. If there were really any obtential for an independent local; all-Palestinian leadership, it would have arisen whether Israel wanted it or not. The truth is that the Palestinians lost any such initiative

To anyone who looked at the local scene with open eyes, the outcome of the 1976 elections was known before they were bold. Instead of a moderate independent local leadership making its appearance, PLO representatives, and sympathlzers were elected as anticipated. Instead of having to deal with the relatively moderate, traditional pro-Jordanian local leaders, Israel has had to deal, since 1976, with more radical slements receiving their instructions direct from the PLO headquarters.

WHEN ONE HEARS today that Mr. Robert Strauss wants Palestinian leaders to participate in negotiations on the autonomy question, or when Israei speaks about Palestinians participating in the negotiations, there is a feeling that both are either kidding themselves or are simply reading the situation wrongly yet

Which local Palestinians are they talking about? Which local Palestinian leadership do thay mean? There is no such thing as an independent leadership. It is only with reluctance that the mayors of the Arab towns of Judea, Samaria and Gaza are ready to deal even with purely municipal matters without first securing the consent of the PLO leadership. In more serious political matters, they would not dare to do anything without the permission of the PLO. And when they do act, let there be no doubt about it — they will

The writing on the wall was supplied by Rashad Shawwa, the mayor of Gaza, who objected even to the diract transfer of Gazan students' examination papers from Israel to Egypt, because such an act symbolized the normalization of relations and the implementation of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty, to which the PLO objects.

To sum up, there is no point in looking for some "new" Palestinian laaders to take part in the negotiations. It is no good hoping for leus ex machina. Whoever today talks about the participation of Palestinians in the negotiations means the PLO, however he dis-

This situation is in many ways of Israel's making. Instead of letting. the Palestinian problem remain an internal Arah problem, as the Palestinians themselves wished it to be, Israel turned it, by offering the autonomy, into an Israeli-American problem. Instead of concentrating on tha solution of the Jewish problem, Israel is embroiling itself in the Palestinian one.

THE BAVLI QUARTER RESIDENTS

Sir. — We refer to Michai Yudelman's report of August 5, "Lahat scraps planned Betar football field in Bavli quarter." which defames Bavli residents. According to municipal sources quoted in this article, many people believe that snobbism is the reason for the opposition of these residents to the Betar football field.

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Here are the facts: there are at present about 3,500 families living in the Bavil quarter and it is planned to increase this number to 5,250. This is a residential neighbourbood and it is the most densely populated one in Israel. In the evenings, when there is a show at the Dekel Cinema which is in the centre of the quarter, it is impossible to go out for a walk. On Saturdays, there are often four lines of cars along the Yarkon Park which borders on our neighbourhood. The emanations of the Resding Station chimney every day of the week. as well as the smell and smoke from steeks cooking in the Yarkon Park every Saturday and boliday make ecological conditions unhearable. The only thing lacking is a football

When we opposed the establishment of a Betar football field in our quarter, we had the feeling we were undertaking a lost cause. The Tel Aviv Municipality is crammed with Betar people: the Deputy Mayor, Yigai Griffei, and the Municipai Councillor, Arye Kremmer, are among the leaders of Betar. Ya'acov Hadar, the Town Clerk, is the director of the Tei Aviv group which is planning the football field.

The Mayor sgreed to talk to us only after we submitted an appeal signed by 500 opponents of the field. He did not give in and wanted to persuade the Bavil quarter residents to agree to the field. So we organized a meeting of neighbours. The Mayor, Shlomo Lahat, listened to us and talked to us; again he did not give in, but accepted the residents' opinion only after a vote was taken. We heifcve he behaved like a true of such ideas is exactly the nature of the Arah propaganda campaign against Israel. The association of Israel with concepts such as racism; fascism, fanatic nationalism, etc. is not what one would expect to hear from a responsible Knesset member.
